REPORT OF SUPERINTENDENT

To the School Board and Citizens of Richmond:

I hereby respectfully submit my first annual report as Superintendent of Schools.

My first care, on taking charge of the Richmond schools in September, was to ascertain as accurately as possible how the schools ranked in actual accomplishment of the work that schools are supposed to do; in other words, to find out how the schools of this district compared, grade for grade, with schools in general throughout the country.

Up to within a few years practically all school systems have been run in a more or less haphazard fashion, with no means of knowing definitely whether or not they were really accomplishing what they should in the way of pupil instruction. It has been customary to build schoolhouses, equip them with furniture, books and other supplies, hire teachers more or less properly qualified to teach, run the schools so many months per year, and then take for granted that the schools were functioning properly in the way of teaching the children the things they ought to know and developing in them the mental attitudes and habits of action requisite to social efficiency and good citizenship.

All too often this confidence has been misplaced. But, until recently, there seemed to be no way of checking up the work of the schools very accurately; no way of measuring the output of the schools as we can measure the output of a factory. Neither was there any way of comparing directly the work done in one school system with that being done in other school systems. This was due primarily to varying standards of grading among teachers and superintendents. Each teacher and each superintendent had his own individual ideas on the subject, and the standards of their particular teachers or supervisors were the ones which the schools of any particular locality were expected to achieve. Hence it came about that the schools in neighboring communities, and even within the same community, would vary greatly in efficiency due to lack of standardization of subject matter and grades. An eight grade in one school might not be so far advanced in their studies as the sixth grade in another school simply because there were no definite standards of accomplishment for any grade other than those of individual teachers and superintendents.

As a consequence a community might easily become misled into the belief that it had excellent schools when in reality its schools were much below par as compared with those in other towns. Only when parents moved to other places and their children had to be put back a grade or two, did they awake to the realization that there is a vast difference in the efficiency of schools in different communities even when one community spends as much or more on its schools as the others spend. Sometimes the town that is spending the most money on its schools is getting the least in the way of educational results.

But conditions have changed greatly in this respect during the past few years. It is no longer necessary to guess at what the schools are accomplishing, or how they compare with schools in other parts of the state or country. There is no longer any reason why any community cannot know just how its schools rank in comparison with schools in general in this country. We now have instruments with which we can measure the accomplishment of pupils from year to year, not in accordance with the judgment of particular teachers and superintendents, but in accordance with what the pupils in thousands of other schools have actually done. We can tell which schools are doing more and better work per year just as we can tell which of several factories are turning out the most pairs of high grade shoes or the most yards of fine cloth in a given time. Furthermore, we have definite standards of achievement for each grade in each school subject and can measure with a fair degree of accuracy just how far any class or individual pupil is behind or ahead of the grade standards. The efficiency of the teacher can be measured by the amount and quality of the work she accomplishes, as indicated by the progress of her pupils, just as the efficiency of the wood-chopper can be estimated by the number of cords of wood he can chop in a given time.

The instruments by means of which all these desirable things can be accomplished are standardized tests in the various school subjects. We know what hundreds of thousands of other children in many different schools have done with these same tests and we simply compare the work of the children in our schools with that of the other children. These instruments for the comparative measurement of class-room products are not yet perfected but, even so, they are by far the fairest and most accurate means yet found with which to measure learning and efficiency of instruction. Early in the fall a survey of the schools of this district was made by means of standardized tests in order to ascertain the conditions existing at the beginning of the school year. As a result of this survey the schools of the district as a whole were found to average nearly a year below standard. While in some subjects they were well up to or above grade, in other subjects they were much below par. These conditions were no different than would probably be found in any school system wherein there was no definite provision made for the measurement of class-room products objectively. The Richmond schools were in fully as good condition as those of the other towns of the district.

As soon as existing conditions had been definitely determined steps were taken immediately to remedy those which were undesirable. It is too early in the year to do more than prophesy in regard to results. The midyear tests have just been completed and the pupils' scores tabulated. The graph records show good progress in most subjects for the first half year. If equal progress is made for the last half of the year, not only will a normal year's work be accomplished, but a large percentage of the arrears will be made up. Present indications are that most of the children will be found nearly or quite up to standard in their school work by the end of the school year.

It is my plan to give the tests in all schools three times a year. The September tests are to find out how the schools stand at the beginning of the year. The midyear tests are to find out how the pupils are progressing in their work and where there is failure to make proper progress. In June the tests are given again for promotion purposes. In this way we can keep track of how the children are progressing in their studies as compared with the children in other school systems, and see wherein and to what extent the schools are succeeding or failing in their purpose. Permanent records are kept of the progress of every pupil by means of recording the results of the tests on graph cards, one of which for each child in the district is kept on file in the superintendent's office. These cards show at a glance each child's standing in his or her studies at the beginning, at the middle, and at the end of the school year. Each teacher has copies of these cards for pupils of her particular school.

The purpose of the whole scheme is to eliminate haphazard guess-work in the conduct of the community's most important and most expensive business, and to substitute therefor scientific accuracy in measuring the efficiency of that business so that everybody concerned may know just how the schools stand in point of efficiency at any time; that is, how they stand in regard to value received by the district for every dollar expended, in comparison with the schools of other communities.

Just a word in regard to buildings and equipment. The building at North Richmond is in good condition, well and properly lighted as a result of recent remodeling. A similar job should be done on the other building as soon as possible. When this is done the most pressing need of the Richmond schools will be some new blackboards. The old cloth and wood blackboards are in such shape as to be almost useless for practical purposes. Book cupboards or bookshelves are also badly needed in both buildings. At the beginning of the year, there was a considerable lack of textbooks needed to carry out the state program of studies; but this need has been almost entirely filled.

In conclusion I wish to extend to the members of the school board my thanks for their interest in my work and their cooperation in meeting the needs of the schools.

Respectfully submitted,

SAMUEL S. BROOKS.

REPORT OF TELEPHONE MANAGER

As will be seen by the financial statement the telephone has cost the town some expense the past year, owing to building over some parts of the system which were in bad shape and damaged caused by the bad ice storm the first of the winter.

I feel however that the expense was justified and we are getting better service in many ways than for a long time past.

We have been obliged to raise the monthly rate but our rates are still lower than outside towns.
